C. HAROLD SACKETT

We

Mr. Sackett came to Southwest High School in February, 1938. Since then he has been an ever-present help to both faculty and students. His wisdom helped us in laying a firm foundation for the young, untried school, and his judgment has aided us in placing this school with the foremost high schools of St. Louis. He has helped us to weather the trying period of war, and it is to his guidance that we look as we prepare ourselves for a world of peace. He is always at our side—our friend and councilor.

Mr. Sackett, a graduate of Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, came to St. Louis in 1910 as a teacher of botany at Soldan High School. In 1918 he became assistant principal of Blewett Junior High School. Ten years later he was made principal of Emerson School and a year after that he was transferred to the Mark Twain School as its principal. In 1933 Mr. Sackett was appointed assistant principal of Roosevelt High School. In February, 1938, he came to Southwest High School, where he has served very successfully as principal ever since.

Dedicate Our Book

Foreword

Since the doors of Southwest High School opened to a group of eager freshmen and sophomores in 1937, ten eventful years have passed. Before the school was well started, the impact of war staggered our nation and upset the "noiseless tenor" of our way. In spite of this cataclysm our school has struggled forward. It has taken its place among the high schools of the city. Our foundations are strong, and we have advanced steadily in all fields of school and community work. We are pleased with the work of our clubs, our athletics, our publications; we take satisfaction in the outstanding accomplishments of our dance, music, dramatic, art, and service groups; we are proud of our excellent scholastic attainments.

In this book the 1947 Staff of the ROUNDUP tries to take stock of our progress and to note our achievements thus far. We hope that this record will inspire our students to carry forward the good work of Southwest High School.

"HE BUILDED BETTER THAN HE KNEW" (Emerson)

BY DOROTHY KRUEGER

All things must have a beginning. Yet very few busy Southwesterners know just when or how our Alma Mater got its start. Why not use this page as a crystal ball to look back at the first ten years of our school?

The cornerstone was laid on December 10, 1936, and our $800,000 building of sixty-five rooms was officially opened on September 7, 1937. Standing majestically above its main entrance are five statues sculptored by Fred Morie of St. Louis. Taken as a whole, they represent "Youthful Leadership". Individually, they symbolize "Exact Sciences", "Social Interests", "Youthful Leadership", "The Liberal Arts", and "Athletic Activities". Almost 1,200 eager students entered through the main door below them on that sunny morning, to inspect the modern classrooms, survey the well-equipped lunchroom, marvel at the quiet library, and enjoy the artistic auditorium.

Mr. Harry H. Seidel as principal, Mr. Norman B. Dee as assistant, and forty-one teachers were on hand to launch the good ship Southwest. In January, 1938, Mr. Seidel was recalled to his duties at the Board of Education office, and Mr. Harold Sackett became our captain and steered us through the trying years of organization. Of the forty-one teachers who formed the original faculty, death has claimed five, and ten have gone to other fields of endeavor. Mr. Dee, too, has left and is now principal of McKinley High School.

No graduation class marched down the aisles of our beautiful auditorium until June, 1939. Mr. Kelbaugh sponsored this class of 119. At their Class Day program the following year, the graduates of June, 1940, presented, for the first time, a gift of books to the school. Since then, each class has followed this example.

Southwest has been the recipient of several generous gifts. One of her prized possessions is the electric organ, presented as a gift to the school by the late Mr. Walter Wilcox "To promote a taste for and an appreciation of good music". Our library, too, has benefited by his generosity. The American flag was presented to the school by The Sons of the American Revolution. On the lawn of the school stands a hawthorn tree, and a granite marker bearing the inscription: "Dedicated to our Southwest boys who served in World War Two". This was presented in a dedication service on April 30, 1943, by the Southwest Parent-Teacher Association.

As our school is a democratic institution, the student body had a part in naming it. Various names were proposed, but the students wanted Southwest because of the location. Accordingly, the Board of Education acceded to their wishes and so named it on November 8, 1938.

Green and Gold, our colors, were selected by a majority vote of students after seeing posters of color combinations which were submitted by Miss Lodwick's art class. These colors signify beauty, youth, peace, and endurance—ideals for which Southwest High School may strive. Contests gave us the names PIONEER, ROUNDUP, and STEER.

Southwest's newspaper, the PIONEER, issued its first edition on October 7, 1938. We are proud of the paper, and under Miss Murphy's guidance it has become one of the outstanding high school papers of the country. It contains Southwest sports, clubs, fashions, editorials, and cartoons. Its circulation has grown from 1,029 to 1,820 subscriptions. Our yearbook was first published in 1938. The first five issues were sponsored by Mr. Rosencranz; the last five issues have come out under the direction of Miss McIntire. Our grads tell us that they have no possession which is prized more highly than their four yearbooks, which record their stay at Southwest. Our STEER began in 1944 with Miss McKinney as moderator. It is a handbook which has proved to be of great value to our incoming freshmen.

Now that we've had a look at the past, let's shelve our crystal ball. Although we are still very young in actual years, we've established many traditions to be honored and continued by the classes still to come.

"DRINK DEEP OR TASTE NOT THE PIERIAN SPRING" (Pope)

BY JANE OECHSLE

Since its opening ten years ago Southwest has acquired an outstanding reputation along many lines. Among these is scholarship. One needs but look at the college records of our graduates or glance at our publications to feel well satisfied with our achievement in this, the most important field of accomplishment.

Until January, 1945, one senior from each graduating class received a four-year honor scholarship of $800 to Washington University. Jimmy Sisk (now Dr. James Sisk) won our first one in 1939. As the years passed, Gladys Manewal, Betty Cohn, Robert Von Houton, Helen Herr, Joyce Harrelson, Corinne Thomas, Marilyn Mesloh, Jeanne Zeller, Annette Nahmenissen, Richard Overbeck, Audrey Vogel, Ella Mae Eickmann, Carol Sagner, Herman Ottenad, and Jewell Roberts followed in his footsteps. All have been a credit to their Alma Mater. Most of them have made excellent records. Many have been elected to Phi Beta Kappa or Sigma Xi. Washington University now presents an additional scholarship of $1,200 through a city-wide competitive examination. In 1945, Bernard Dell received one of these coveted honors, and in 1946 Southwest students, Carol Sagner and Charles Baker, received two of the ten given.

Space will not permit our naming the many scholarships our students have gained from other universities. We cannot, however, fail to mention one of the finest ever received, the Westinghouse Science Talent Search Scholarship, presented to Jules Kernen in 1946. It entitles him to four years of study at any university in the United States. Jules is now working hard at Harvard, carrying on the fine record he made here. Another, also, which is outstanding was awarded to Emma Jean Kramer by Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

In literature, Richard Cohen, Bill Conwell, and Milton Lauenstein won essay contests competing in a wide field of contestants. A glance at the ROUNDUP throughout the years shows the following honors in poetry: sixty poems printed in the National High School Poetry Anthology, twenty-three read at the College Club Evening of Poetry, and three received honorable mention from the Wednesday Club.

From the time of its beginning on October 7, 1938, our paper, the PIONEER, has reflected the ability of the groups who have edited it. In 1944 and 1945 it won the All-American honor rating from the National Scholastic Press Association. Each year new ideas and features appear. Combined, these help to make the PIONEER the great paper it is now—indeed worthy of the high honors bestowed upon it.

Looking back, we find that the first yearbook was also published in 1938. A study of the pages of the nine books published shows the high standards Southwest has maintained, for each one gives a resumé of the school's achievements.

So you see, Southwest has achieved a great deal in the field of scholarship. We can look back with pride at the past ten years. Are we going to keep up the good work? It's up to you students. How about it?

NATURE'S MEMORIAM

(Prize Winning Poem)

BY GEORGE E. JOSLIN, JR.

*Far on some distant lonely shore
A youthful warrior lies.
Lulled by the ocean's constant roar,
Mourned by the gulls' loud cries.*

(Accepted for publication by the National High School Poetry Association)

UNGRATEFUL

And all his land goes rushing free.
The tyrant slays the goodly heart,
And all his joys are cast apart.
The loafer slays his precious time,
And all life's worth flees in its prime.*

QUALITY FOLKS

(Prize Winning Short Story)

BY CAROLYN RUSH

Clover Lick is a quiet, lazy, little hamlet nestled comfortably in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia—population . . . twenty-three. The chief attractions of Main Street are Abner Jennings' Garage, Jess Trumbell's Good Place for Good Eats, and Walt Ethan's sawmill toward the edge of town. The objects of interest at Abner's Garage are the gasoline pump and a rather strange collection of furniture. This includes two wicker chairs, barely capable of self-support, an old green bench, weathered and worn, a three-legged stool, one squeaky rocker, and a straight-backed chair badly in need of new caning. All the men from miles around gravitate to this sundry assortment on weekly trips "to town". With jaws moving together in rapt delight, they form the perfect picture of utter content. There are only slight pauses breaking the rhythm as the wad is shifted thoughtfully to the other cheek and a brown jet of tobacco juice is spat sizzingly on the mud street in front of them.

One mild March evening just a few weeks before the county school let out, the "men-folk" of Clover Lick had gathered at Abner's in the customary fashion. Culpepper County School always lets out early in the spring so that the youngsters can help their pas with some of the planting. Jed Crocker had just joined the group in front of the garage.

"Lo, Jed," said Abner.

"Howdy, Abner," he replied.

The chewing was resumed and the talk drifted on to other matters. Crops—weather—the Trumbells' feud—the sheriff's yearly hunt for the Skeet Rock Gang; it was merely a discussion of everyday happenings. Suddenly talk sprang up about the new "school-marm".

"I hear she's right purty an' smart as a whip. Good looks an' brains don't usually go together in a woman!" ventured Joshua Lance.

"Woman! Huh! She's only a snip of a girl!" retorted Chad Olliver. He was the most ineligible bachelor of those parts. All the youngsters feared him, and he wasn't much liked by the men. He was a frail little man of approximately seventy years of age, unaccomplished except for one trade—that of making excellent corn whisky. About once a month he went up the mountain to Cripple Creek, where he hid his still.

"But purty as pie, by cracky!" cackled Old Sam, exposing his toothless grin.

"Joe says she's goin' tuh have closin' day exercises," announced Jed.

"What's them?" asked Chad.

"Oh, they git up an' speak a piece er two er maybe sing a song, 'n then thuh teacher says good-bye to 'em, an' school's let out," explained Jed, and then in an offhand way, but with pride shining in his eyes, he added quietly, "Joey's goin' tuh speak a piece there."

Joe was Jed Crocker's fourteen-year-old son. The Crocker cabin was up the mountain quite a piece, and there Sate Crocker, Joe's mother, kept house and reared a family.

"Well, as I always say, it 'ud be a heap better tuh have a man fer a teacher. Somebody who'd not be skeered tuh wear out a willer on 'em," stated Chad with scorn and disgust.

"Well, I think she's got some purty good ideas! This closin' day sounds nice," said Joshua amiably.

"Idears be hanged!" Chad snorted. "What she ought tuh have is common horse sense an' a strong arm instead of so many newfangled folderols."

"Speakin' o' thuh closin' day exercises, Joey's goin' tuh speak a piece," Jed volunteered.

"An' anyhow," continued Chad, "she's probably already got her eye on some young whippersnapper."

"Er some young whippersnapper has got his eye on her," chuckled Ol' Sam.

The men laughed and guffawed, and then there was a lull in the conversation. Jed opened his mouth hopefully, but Josh interrupted him again.

"Say, Abner, I thought you was aimin' tuh plant a couple o' hickory-nut trees out here in front."

"I was, Josh, but Jennie likes walnuts better." Jed slumped back in his chair and stared moodily at the sky.

"What was it you was a-sayin', Jed?" asked Ol' Sam.

"Was you a-sayin' somethin', Jed?" asked Chad innocently.

"Well, hang 't all! I didn't say a dad-draffed thing," Jed angrily answered, his temperature nearing the boiling point. The men waited quietly for the explosion to come. There was a tense silence—until from the depths of the wicker chair a rather sheepish voice added, "I didn't say nothin' 'cept that Joey is goin' tuh speak a piece at thuh closin' day exercises."

"Well, why didn'tcha tell us before, Jed?" exclaimed Chad.

Jed sighed, completely exasperated.

"What's thuh name of it, Jed?" asked Joshua.

"Well," said Jed hesitantly, "it's a real long one called 'Under thuh Spreadin' Chestnut Tree'. Joe says it's got eight verses, an' he already knows two."

"Well, what'd ya' know? Li'l Joey turnin' poet," chided Abner.

"I guess that's purty good fer a boy o' fourteen," admitted Ethan Allen.

"Purty good! Yer dern-tootin' it's good," Jed answered, a little less offended. "Well, Sate told me I had tuh do thuh milkin' tonight, so I'd best be gittin' home," and, chewing consolingly on a stalk of timothy thrust between his teeth, he ambled up the road toward home.

From the lean-to at the rear of the cabin, Jed, rinsing out the milk-pail, heard a low, droning singsong, punctuated now and then with ejaculations. Drying his hands hastily on his rough wool shirt, he entered the warm kitchen.

"Now try it once more, Joey," commanded a patient voice.

"Aw rats, Ma! I know it all, 'cept thuh last couple o' verses," Joe complained, his face all screwed up in his effort to convince.

"I said try it again, Joe!" The patient voice had grown sterner.

"But, Ma!"

"Do as yore ma says, Joe," snapped Jed, kicking his boots into the corner.

Running his hand impatiently through the wisps of hair straggling over his eyes, Joe whispered cautiously under his breath, "Nuts!" After one more coveted glance at the fast-fading daylight, he sighed plaintively and started again.

"Under thuh spreadin' chestnut tree

Thuh village smithy stands:

Thuh smith, a mighty man is he,

With large and sinewy hands;"

Joe's hands were thrust deep in his pockets, and his bare toe searched furtively between the cracks of the log floor.

Jed listened attentively with a sort of half-smile on his face. He sighed contentedly and pulled a chair up to the table, now set with black-eyed peas and corn pone.

Early the next morning, as Jed was coming in for breakfast after having done the milking, he heard a cheerful whistle and, turning around, saw Chad Olliver beckoning to him impatiently from the rail fence along the road.

"Mornin', Chad. How be ya?" Jed pounded him good-naturedly on the back, and the old man nearly collapsed beneath the warmth of his greeting.

"I jist thought I'd let ya know that I'm goin' up the mountain a piece today. Maybe all thuh way tuh Cripple Creek," Chad told him.

"Up to thuh mill, huh?" Jed asked hopefully.

"Um-m-m, maybe," Chad replied.

"I guess ya've got plenty o' corn with ya?" queried Jed.

"Yep. I got thuh corn all righty. All we need is a full moon. Say, Jed, drop a word tuh thuh fellers about it. Will ya? Tell 'em it'll be ready in about . . . le's see . . . today's Monday . . . um-m-m . . . about a week from next Thursday. An' hush it up in case the sheriff's got his ear to thuh ground." Chad, seeing Sate approaching them, her face grim and set, raised his voice. "Yep, Jed, ya've got thuh purtiest pair o' mules this side o' thuh mountain. But I heerd that Rand"—breaking off—"Mornin', Mizz. Crocker . . . thet Rand Lennie, down in Elk Valley, has some mighty good ones."

"Huh!" snorted Jed, "I'm willin' tuh bet my mules against any of 'em in thuh valley."

"Well, I've got tuh be gittin' along if I ever aim tuh git there," and, lowering his voice, Chad added, "Don't fergit tuh tell thuh fellers—ten days." And with that, Chad tramped up the mountain road, shifting the heavy sack to the other shoulder.

Jed squared his shoulders, turned, and entered the cabin where Sate wrathfully awaited him. She turned on him with a cold but furious anger.

"Jed, was Chad Olliver invitin' you tuh one o' his corn-likker doin's?"

"What if he was, Sate? A little corn-likker never hurt no one."

"Well, yore not a-goin' to it, Jed!"

"Ya bet 'cher life I am! Ya jist mind yore own bizzness, an' I'll take keer o' myself," Jed replied scornfully.

"If ya git drunk on thet stuff jist once more, Jed, I'll . . ." Seeing Joe enter the room, Sate bit her tongue and stopped the furious onrush of words. Glowering furiously at Jed, she set the victuals on the table.

A strained silence settled over the usually warm and cozy kitchen, with the exception of Joe's cheerful chatter. Stony-faced and white-lipped, Sate helped Joe to the biscuits and sausages. Finally, shrugging his shoulders, Jed left the cabin and strode off toward Clover Lick.

The pale thin moon had just slipped behind a cloud when a stealthy figure left the Crocker cabin at almost eleven o'clock. It was the night designated by Chad Olliver for the "fellers" to join him up at Cripple Creek. But a white face peered from the window. Sate's deep black eyes followed Jed's retreating figure up the mountain. Tears rolled quietly down her cheeks and dropped unheeded on her rough, worn hands. Her thoughts were of Joey and his performance on the following day. Sate knew that Joe had a deep, strong affection for his pa and that he was depending on Jed to be there. Jed, in the quiet undemonstrative way of the mountain-folk, was, of course, very fond and proud of his son, but he couldn't resist the chance for a good time. Sighing, she pulled the shawl more closely about her and settled herself to await Jed's uncertain arrival. A cold draft snuffed out the lighted candle, and Sate waited alone in the darkness.

As the first short fingers of dawn crept over the mountain, pulling after it the red sun, Jed stumbled home and was half-dragged, half-carried to bed, where he fell into a deep stupor.

Later that morning, about six o'clock, Joe came running into the kitchen after having fed the two cows. Whistling merrily, he paused in his route to the table long enough to splash icy spring water over his face and to rub it briskly with the coarse flour-sack towel.

"Mornin', Ma. Nice day, ain't it?" he said, and then rather shyly, as if with an afterthought, he gave her a quick hug and swung his leg over the chair to sit down at the table.

"Wh . . . why, Joey," Sate stammered, flushed and pleased with Joe's unusual display of affection. "Joe, you know it ain't perlite tuh set down thet a-way. Eat up now, cause yer pa won't be eatin' no breakfast." She heaped a stack of golden griddle cakes on the chipped plate; then she placed a wooden bowl of shining, juicy blueberries on the table. Joe just loved blueberries.

"Why ain't Pap eatin' none, Ma?"

"Well, uh, he ain't a-feelin' so good, Joe."

"Oh, that's too bad." Joe helped himself again to the blueberries. His bluish tongue grew bluer as spoonful after spoonful made its way to his mouth.

Sate busied herself cleaning the chicken for the big dinner at noon after the program.

"Now run on upstairs and put on thet clean shirt; don't fergit yer shoes, after blackenin' 'em so good. I darned a pair o' yer pa's socks fer ya. They're inside yer shoes."

A few minutes later, coming down the steps three at a time, he paused in front of Sate for final inspection.

"Tell Pa that I'll be watchin' fer him 'n you. An' by the way, you'd better start pretty soon."

"Uh, Joe . . . I got somethin' tuh tell ya."

"Yeah, Ma? What is it?"

"Yer pa kain't come tuh the program, Joey." At last the heartbreaking news was out.

"Ma! Pap kain't come?" Little Joey stared at her, limp, incredulous.

"Well, ya see, Son, Chad Olliver made some corn-likker, an' o' course . . ."

"Oh!" said Joe in a small, strained voice; turning, he walked out of the cabin and down the road toward the schoolhouse. Dismayed, disappointed, his world was in ruins.

Sate, turning on her heel, strode rapidly into the room where Jed, still sound asleep, lay sprawled on the bed; seizing his shoulder roughly, she shook him awake.

"Oh, it's you! Why don't 'cha le' me sleep it off, Sate? Now stop botherin' me."

Sate shouted, "Jed, Jed Crocker! Git up this here minute! Today's Joey's program. He's goin' tuh say his piece. He wants ya tuh be there, Jed." But Pa had gone back to sleep. She marched out of the room and into the kitchen, where she appeased her anger somewhat by throwing the pans onto their hooks and nails. The clatter and din was deafening, but Jed didn't wake up. Throwing on her hat, she marched down the road to the schoolhouse, without a backward glance at Jed, still sprawled on the bed.

After almost fifteen minutes of complete silence, Jed awoke. He sat up on the bed and ran his fingers through his tangled hair. He glanced at the disorder around him and gradually his thoughts cleared. Joe was going to say a piece and he wanted his pa to be there. He staggered to his feet and, grabbing his coat, started down the road.

The program was almost over. Joe Crocker, being the oldest, was the last performer. His teacher nodded for him to get up. He walked to the front of the stage. Suddenly the door creaked and shuddered, and Jed tip-toed in and sat down. Joe straightened up, and his eyes shone. He began his poem confidently. He knew it perfectly and while he said it, his eyes never left his pa's face; he didn't falter once. When he had finished, he turned and walked almost mechanically to his seat. The applause was gratifying, but he heard none of it. He could only see Jed sitting there, misty-eyed, calm, his arms folded.

Sate hurried home to prepare the big dinner in celebration of Joe's big day. But Jed and Joey walked slowly home, chatting companionably. At last, reaching a particularly beautiful spot, Jed stopped, and laying his hand heavily on Joe's shoulder, he said, "Joe, I hear there's a new settlement-school down in the valley. A lot o' boys and girls yore age go there fer a couple o' months in thuh winter. Ya seem tuh have a cravin' fer books. How'd ya like tuh go down there this winter an' git some more book-larnin'?"

Joe looked off over his beautiful Blue Ridge Mountains for a moment and then, grinning winsomely as he impulsively grasped his pa's hand, he said, "Gee whilikers, Pap! Then we'd be quality folks!"

WATER FOUNTAINS WITH PERSONALITY

BY ALICE SHAD

Have you ever watched an unsuspecting schoolmate sidle up to one of Southwest's drinking fountains for a refreshing quaff of H<sub>2</sub>O only to be splattered in the face with a spray of cold water? That's an every-day occurrence around these parts and good for a laugh every time. Of course, the person on the receiving end doesn't appreciate the humor of it, but that's life. You just can't please everybody.

The fountains at Southwest aren't just every-day faucets. These fountains have personality. At first I thought a few veteran gremlins, home from the wars, had set up housekeeping around here and were making the faucets squirt high when they should squirt low, or perhaps Kilroy was making a sneaky comeback through the water pipes; but I finally decided that these fountains had minds of their own and were going to let people know it.

I believe the reason they act up is that they don't feel well. Perhaps their pipes were cold the other night and they caught rheumatism in their joints. Or maybe their insides are all upset and they've got rust on their washers. The only way the poor things can show their feelings is to rebel against those crazy people who keep turning their handles and trying to make them give water all the time. I know if I were a water faucet I wouldn't like to be forced to supply with water strange people for whom I had no feelings whatever; and just think how monotonous to be continually turned on and off. Why, it's enough to drive a faucet crazy. Not that I'm for these temperamental little mechanisms acting up all the time. It's just that I can see their side of it.

You've no doubt received a free eye wash at one time or another and therefore don't appreciate our fountains acting like miniature Old Faithfuls, but, after all, it's not every fountain that gives you a drink and washes your face at the same time.

I believe this drinking fountain dilemma could be easily solved if at each fountain were placed an umbrella with a wee hole in the top, a towel, a face cloth, and soap. When you wanted a drink all you'd have to do would be to put the umbrella over the fountain and allow the water to come through the hole. If some water did sprinkle through, however, you might go "whole hog" and apply the face rag and soap.

Those temperamental fountains aren't so bad as they're made out to be; and though they may not be human, deep down in their sewer pipes they must have warm water running through their interiors. You know, when you think of it, it's quite an amusing affair. Just remember how hilarious the girl victims look with their pancake makeup dripping down their noses. Ha, ha, big joke; but wait till it happens to you. Well, happy swimming and here's water in your eye!

HUBBA, HUBBA

(Prize Winning Essay)

BY JIM WEST

"Hubba, hubba!" Ah, word of beauty; magic! How numerous and spicy are its interpretations. It is heard from the classroom to the burlesque show; from the fireside to the poolhall. Who knows? Perhaps it will become a standard part of the King's English. And yet it is the strangest of all expressions to come from that unique form of American speech known as "slang".

Let us try to discover the meaning of this "hubba, hubba". Can you define it? I doubt that I could. I certainly could use it at the most opportune moment, but to attempt a definition, I'd rather not try. Sometimes it is used to describe a most attractive young lady, or to gain the attention of an individual of either sex. Sometimes it is said passionately, and at other times flirtatiously, or admiringly. Truly, it is a versatile phrase.

Where did it come from? Some say it was first used by a sergeant to accelerate the activities of his G.I.'s. On the other hand, a usually reliable source states that it is, or was, the battle cry of a certain New York college football team. I find it hard, however, to picture a mountainous football player charging at me with murder in his eye and "Hubba, hubba!!" on his lips. Then, again, it may have been one of the first words grunted by one of our cave-dwelling ancestors as he dragged the apple of his eye by her hair through the forest. As for the question of how it got its present usage, no one seems to know.

It differs greatly from other slang expressions. I suppose it is really a part of the chatter which seems to center about a juke box and is appropriately called "jive talk". It runs something like this:

"Well, whadaya say, Cats? What's cookin'? C'mon, let's get groovy!"

And sooner or later you will surely hear someone say: "Hubba, hubba!"

No one pays particular attention to the words or the person who says them, but the person to whom they are directed, usually a girl, will be gazed upon with mingled glances of desire, admiration, and envy. Soon, however, the spell will pass, and the conversation will drift back to normal channels.

No one seems to realize the power that the expression possesses. It can catch someone's attention, draw out a girlish blush, or even promote distrust between a girl and her boy-friend, should he casually toss a "hubba" in the wrong direction. If said at the right moment, it brands its speaker as a definite authority on the opposite sex. Many a spirit has been made or broken by this magic phrase.

Perhaps it shouldn't be called a word, but more of an exclamation, as when you are stuck with a pin or you smash your thumb with a hammer and say, "Ouch!" In the same way, when you see an attractive girl, you say, very naturally, "Hubba, hubba!" (There are two ways of spelling it, with a single or double b. I prefer the double.)

But no matter how you spell it, how you say it, or how you define it, you cannot fail to recognize it. It is as much a part of the younger generation as are ice-cream sodas, swing music, and juke boxes. Is it just another of the passing parade of fads? Will it pass on as did high-button shoes and ankle-length skirts? I don't believe that it will. I think "hubba" is here to stay. Observing the way it has grown in popularity, I don't see how it can miss. Men of learning may scoff and the practical and conventional-minded brand it as ridiculous, but I say the future of "hubba, hubba" looks promising.

The possibilities of this most mystifying of phrases are boundless. Perhaps, generations from now, humans will have dispensed with their elaborate system of love-making. Instead of a young man turning red as a beet and nervously blurting, "Darling, I love you. Will you marry me?", he will simply inquire softly, "Hubba, hubba?"

And if the lady in question coyly surveys the tip of her shoe and hesitatingly murmurs, "Hubba, hubba!", then the gentleman is sure of living happily ever after, and mankind will have overcome a most embarrassing way of proposing marriage.

Yes, the future looks bright. "Hubba, hubba" marches on!

A BUSH

BY JAMES McDONALD

*As I was walking through the woods,
Along a beaten trail,
I came upon a little bush
Whose leaves were bright and frail.*

*Its roots had thrust between the rocks
To reach the humid sand.
The stem was short, but sturdy, though,
And could a storm withstand.*

*Its branches were entangled like
A boy's unruly hair,
And gently sang the leaves their song,
A melody on air.*

SEA LULLABY

BY PEGGY HAMPTON

*The song of the sea
Is but a lullaby singing
The stars to sleep.*

*The moon above
Throws out its light
Upon the waters so deep.*

*The waves dash high
While all below
Do rest in quiet and peace.*

*But still,
The song of the sea
Is but a lullaby singing
The stars to sleep.*

RAIN

BY NED SAPIENZA

*Bouncing off the window sill,
Striking 'gainst the pane,
Pushing out the sunshine,
Little drops of rain.*

*Running through the crop rows,
Moistening the terrain,
Salvaging the parched earth,
Little drops of rain.*

*Scampering through the flower beds,
Racing down the lane,
Falling by the million,
Little drops of rain.*

THE GREATEST CRIME

BY JANE OECHSLE

*What single crime, known not as such, be done
By those who, ignorant of what they do,
Would surely hesitate if they but knew
The many scars of guilt it leaves on one,
Although unseen by others, who'd not shun
The battle with this wrong? Only a few
Who innocent and guiltless be can view
With open eyes this crime excelled by none.
Blind to our faults, sometimes the worst we miss.
So, if in traveling o'er life's great highway
You wish to truthfully, honestly say,
"Dear Lord, I'll never wrong nor sin," heed this—
The guiltiest of all commits the crime
That, in the world, is greatest—killing Time!*

A CONTRAST

BY MARY ELLEN TURMO

*Shady trees on green rolling hills;
Fleecy white clouds like mountains in the sky;
Bright flowers display their blessing from nature,
While the summer breezes blow.*

*Dark, dreary clouds in a dark, dreary sky;
Bleak trees in a glistening white blanket;
The flowers of summer begin their long rest,
And the winter winds blow.*

SYMPHONY

BY CORA MAY MAYO

*A hush descends upon the concert hall,
Pleasant expectation hovers over all.
The music starts softly and climbs up till at last
There is a great crescendo led by the trumpet's blast.
The harp is heard,
'Tis like a bird
That sings for the joy of spring,
And the soul does float on every note
Of drum and brass and string.
Each instrument expresses the feeling of joy and pain,
Each heart now feels exalted—
For Chopin lives again.*

A PASSING TRAIN

BY GERALD KELL

*In the distance, 'round the bend,
A silver, slithering, snake does wend
Streaking, a bullet, with prowess shown.
Destination—unknown.*

*I watch in awe as it passes me by,
Panting and fuming, its face to the sky,
And on it goes, and on, and on,
Spitting fire like a dragon of days long gone.*

*It passes by and fades away down the track,
Continually moving, never turning back.
Until all that remains is a pillar of smoke,
A wistful trail skyward that remains unbroke.*

Of immaculate souls so holy, so pure;
Heavenly reward for deeds well done—
Refuge of those who looked to the sun.*

"HUMAN LIFE CONSISTS IN MUTUAL SERVICE" (Gilman)

BY GLEN TUCKER

In looking back over ten years of successful operation as an integral part of our school system and community, Southwest can well be proud of its splendid record of service. In the respect that the students of a large school such as ours are expected to contribute something to community life and to the operation of the school itself, Southwest students have fulfilled all expectations. Many of our students over the past ten years have willingly donated their time and energy to worthy projects. As these groups are so important, let's take a look at the four major groups which serve.

The first, and no doubt the most familiar group to Southwesterners, is the Student Council, organized by Miss Pierce in 1937. This group, now directed by Miss Hachtman, is responsible for many of the important activities of our school. It heads the PIONEER and ROUNDUP campaigns, collects money for various activities, sponsors Hello Day, and has charge of the Miss Southwest presentation and dance. The representatives meet weekly and discuss measures for the betterment of the school. The Student Council performs a major function in our school life and also reminds us that the forces of democracy are ever present at Southwest.

The next group for consideration is the one which provides music and entertainment. There are several main divisions to this group. One of the most appreciated is our band, which made its debut under the leadership of Mr. Monachesi in 1937. Its history is a succession of services. For example, it is always on hand, both day and night, for football games, aud sessions, clean-up parades, band shows, and many important civic activities. Our orchestra, also directed by Mr. Monachesi since its beginning in 1939, performs at operettas, plays, class days, and graduation exercises. Its service to Southwest is, indeed, important. A third member of this instrumental group is the Swing Band, which has, since 1941, made itself most useful at audits and dances. Our Choir, which proudly wore its green and gold gowns for the first time in 1939, is our leading vocal organization. Under Miss Meyer's leadership, it has given outstanding service. The glee clubs and advanced chorus groups have also added entertainment. We must mention, too, the dance and dramatic groups that serve so ably, the first under Miss Hachtman's fine instruction, the second under Miss Meenach and Miss Riley's excellent direction. From these examples, it is easy to see why Southwest is counted as tops in the entertainment field.

The next organization to review is the Special Service Club, started by Miss Pierce in 1938. This is one of the hardest working groups of our school. Under the leadership of Miss Steffen and Mr. Brew, its members give of their study periods to help in the library, main office, nurse's office, and the supply room. Surely this is a service much needed in order that the school may run smoothly and efficiently.

Finally, a service group of which we can be justly proud is the Junior Red Cross. This group was organized under Miss de Liniere and Miss Mesloh as a British relief unit before our country entered the world conflict. It greatly aided the war effort of Southwest by knitting afghans, sweaters and caps, by filling Christmas stockings and collecting matches and magazines for hospitalized servicemen. It was assisted along this line by the art, shop and sewing classes, which made menu and tray covers, greeting cards, utility bags, game boards, ash trays, and other useful articles. Although the war is over, the Junior Red Cross will continue to work so long as the need remains.

From this brief account of unselfish co-operation, one may readily see that Southwest has done its utmost in the field of service. May it continue throughout the years to come.

"ALL NOW WAS TURNED TO JOLLITY AND GAME" (Milton)

BY RAYMOND HILGERT

Education at Southwest is not confined to the regular classes from 9 A. M. to 3 P. M. School life would be incomplete without the well-rounded program of extracurricular activities which we have come to know as a vital part of education. The organizations and activities which have developed here during the past ten years offer to the student relaxation and pleasant relationships out of the regular period of classes. The finest part of the Southwest activity program is that it covers a wide range of interests. No matter where a student's search for pleasure may lead him, be it from football to chess, horse-back riding to bird study, there is a club here to suit him. In this article, then, we shall briefly review these organizations which have enjoyment as their main purpose. We shall omit those groups whose purpose is service to the school, as they have been dealt with elsewhere.

Perhaps there is nothing so relaxing after a day of concentrated study as sports. In the field of inter-scholastic competition, Southwest's football, basketball, baseball, track, tennis, and golf teams have given a good account of themselves. Despite the fact that our teams have competed in the Public High School League only a limited number of years, our trophy case proudly boasts of four champion teams: our tennis victors of 1942 and 1943, and our baseball winners of 1941 and 1943. Besides these, we have had many a fine team which played through a successful season but which did not capture the first-place trophy.

Although there is no interscholastic program for the girls, there are at Southwest various athletic organizations in which they may use their surplus energy in intramural competition. Girls' bowling, swimming, badminton, tennis, golf, horse-back riding, and volley-ball clubs provide in abundance healthful exercise as well as much enjoyment.

But the field of sports does not monopolize the Southwest activity program. There are many clubs whose chief purpose is to find pleasure from some study or game. Among these are the language clubs, the French, Italian, Latin, and Pan-American, whose members find further enjoyment from the study of the various languages beyond that offered by class work. Other clubs are: Math, for the study of mathematical problems; College, which devotes its time to helping students choose the right school in which to continue their education; Chess, for pupils interested in that game; Aviation, for air-minded students; Bird, for the study of birds; Business Forum, which acquaints its members with business practices; Junior Academy of Science, for pupils interested in Biology; Art, for the artists; Camera, for those who are desirous of taking artistic snapshots; Boys Bowling, for boys who enjoy this sport; Stamp, for pupils interested in any phase of philately; and Pep, for enthusiastic sports boosters.

These, then, are the extra-curricular attractions which our school offers. Of the twenty-one activities which were formed in 1938, twelve have continued throughout the past ten years. Added to these, fourteen others have made their appearance, making twenty-six in all.

Which is your favorite?

OUR YEAR

BY GLEN TUCKER

September. After a well-earned summer vacation, Southwesterners once more entered their Alma Mater. Mr. H. C. Zeis took the place of Mr. Brisbin as assistant principal. The Longhorns opened the football season in defeat. The Student Council, with Gene Overbeck presiding, swung into action with a "Hello Day" aud session. The Pioneer opened its sales campaign, aiming at an even higher mark than that attained last year.

October. Mr. Gerber's racketeers managed to take fourth place. The social season at Southwest got off to a good start as Miss Southwest was formally presented, and a dance was held in her honor.

The brand-new Eights gave the "Skeleton Skip" in honor of the Sevens. High spirits were generally dampened with the advent of the first report cards.

November. The Sevens returned the generosity of the Eights by presenting the "Winter Whirl". In the meantime, the football team continually ran into difficulties, but showed that it could take defeat gamely. Then came Thanksgiving, a time to fortify oneself with plenty of food.

December. The Longhorn cagers opened their season with defeat in a non-league game, but bounced back to nose out McBride. The Operetta was an outstanding success. Rush Hughes made an after-school appearance at Southwest. After being entertained by the Choir and the traditional aud session, the students said farewell to their books for a much-needed Christmas vacation.

January. The faculty welcomed Mr. Jackson, an assistant principal. Art Bauer became the new head of the Student Council. The proud Seniors strutted caps and gowns before their not-so-fortunate classmates in the Class Day aud. Graduation day came and went. A group of 160 Freshmen entered.

February. The KXOK Junior Town Meeting, which was held in the aud and later broadcast on the air by transcription, served as an example of our democratic way of life. After outstanding success in both district and regional contests, Jim Prichard finished third in the zone meeting of the American Legion Oratorical Contest.

March. The hottest basketball team that Southwest has ever produced captured second place in the Brentwood sub-regionals, winning Southwest's first basketball trophy. Dave Perkins took first place in the city's tax campaign speech contest. The Eights honored the Sevens with the "Irish Jig". The Southwest Latin Club made its debut on the radio in a contest with the Latin Club of Ritenour High.

April. The Roundup campaign for the sale of the Tenth Anniversary Edition topped last year's records. The baseball team got off to an excellent start by coppering three straight league games. Our cindermen also started their season well, taking seventh place in the Maplewood Relays. The Sevens presented the "Shower Shag" in honor of the Eights. The Senior Play, "Growing Pains", was a huge success.

May. In commemoration of the Alma Mater's tenth anniversary, the Student Council presented Southwest's first formal dance. The combined music groups of the school entertained the students with a well-planned Music Festival. Field Day was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

June. Everyone breathed easier with the completion of the Comprehensives, and spirits were generally brightened by the thought of the approaching vacation.

SENIOR PLAY

Director      MISS REILLY

On Thursday, April 24th, and Friday, April 25th, the senior classes of Southwest High School presented "Growing Pains", a highly amusing comedy of youth, by Aurania Rouverol.

The action of the play concerns the dilemma of Professor and Mrs. McIntire, who, seeing their young boy and girl, George and Terry, tossed about in the cataract of adolescence, are unable to help, except through advice and direction, which, of course, youth always rejects. These two children, together with their young friends in the neighborhood, experience the small tragedies and great joys of adolescents, and although many things happen to them, the end is bright and promising. The members of the cast are to be highly commended for their able performances, which made the play a great success.

"THEN HONOR WAS THE MEED OF VICTORY (Spenser)

BY LOIS SCHNEIDER

December 7, 1941! The day dawned clear and fresh, peaceful and calm. Not a sign of the future bloody years of war could yet be detected. In the White House at Washington, President Roosevelt played host to a group of men, among them the smiling, friendly Japanese ambassadors. Then, as suddenly and unexpectedly as a rattlesnake strikes its victim, so the skies over Pearl Harbor became infested with insects, endless droves of destructive Japanese planes. The heavens broke loose, and down upon the totally unprepared island beat the violent, steady rain of death and treachery.

Throughout the United States a battle cry resounded. For the first time in its short history, Southwest High School was in the midst of a great, world-wide turmoil. The greedy shadow of war, marking the beginning of an entirely different life, hovered over the school, spurring Southwesterners to plunge head first into a wartime campaign.

We started with a bang! Our government needed money. Where was it to get it? From whom? Uncle Sam's finger seemed to point straight in the direction of American schools, and we volunteered our services without hesitation. Within a short time our first goal of a P-51 Mustang Pursuit plane had been realized and another set immediately for a larger and costlier messenger of revenge, the famous B-17 Flying Fortress. The minuteman flag flew continually at Southwest beneath the ever-waving Stars and Stripes, encouraging us to invest all spare money in war savings. Each day our sales mounted, resulting in a sum of $726,425.00 at the end of the war.

Since the Junior Red Cross has been dealt with under Southwest Service Groups, the excellent work of that organization will not be discussed here.

In 1944, a First Aid Club was founded by Miss Sullivan and Miss Williams. Southwest now became inhabited with weird, out-of-this-world creatures dressed elaborately in the latest wartime fashion of bandages and splints. Yet no one laughed, for all knew that these First Aiders would be the very ones on whom to lean in case of attack. Some of our girls served as nurse's aides in the various hospitals. Students and teachers gave of their blood.

In these and other ways, Southwest strove to do its part toward winning the war. The shining brilliance of patriotism glowed throughout the building, and when finally the long-awaited day of peace arrived in the summer of 1945, Southwesterners were satisfied with their home-front accomplishments.

While our students were striving to do their part, many Southwest boys entered the armed services. These are the ones who really had to pay for the war. All gave of their strength, ability, and courage; some contributed their "last full measure of devotion" toward winning victory for their country. At Southwest remain the service flags dotted boldly with blue and gold stars. Over a thousand of these stars are blue. Thirty-nine are gold. When we look at them, we are reminded that we, who have followed at Southwest, owe to these boys for whom the stars stand a great debt of gratitude for carrying the burden of our war effort.

"DISTANT FOOTSTEPS ECHO THROUGH THE CORRIDOR OF TIME" (Longfellow)

BY CECILIA MUELLER

Tenth Anniversary! We settle ourselves in an easy chair to look at our yearbooks of the past years and to see some of the people whose footsteps still echo throughout our corridors.

As we turn the pages, we come upon our first graduation class, June, 1939. We take our place among the relatives and friends. Down the aisle in gowns of blue and white, the proud seniors come. See the satisfaction of President Glennon Meyrose as he takes his place! Watch the engaging smile of James Sisk, Student Council President! Hear the applause for Terry Tomlinson, athlete of the class! We rejoice with the parents of these 119 boys and girls who have the honor to be members of the first graduation class.

Time passes. We look now at the classes of 1940. Oh, here is Bob Wolfe, president of the January class. Remember when he gave that artistic interpretation of an Indian warrior dance? Here, too, is Le Roy Hart, who proudly brings out the ROUNDUP; also Bob Mecker and Carol Travis, PIONEER editors. We come next to Leo Donati, the football hero; Charles Feeney, an all-round athlete; Robert Walker, the artist; and Rolla Williams, president of the June class.

Our interest turns to 1941. Clifford Dameron presides for the January class, and John Cyrus, the June. Remember the day John and Joe Emmerich put on that Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy act? Now look at June Huber, who follows Carol Travis as PIONEER editor. Watch Robert Morris struggle to bring out the ROUNDUP on time. Hear Nell Funke, Harold Conley, Dick Watkins, and Wayne Wachter singing in the "Red Mill", and listen to the French horn of Vincent Rapini.

1942! John Hunt is doubling as president of his class and track star, and John Gray becomes the choice of the June class for president. Harry Fey rounds up the ROUNDUP. June De Winter and Marilyn Mesloh edit the PIONEER. The Ziervogels start their famous tennis career. The beautiful voices of Annabelle Garner and Arthur Hampton lead in THE FORTUNE TELLER. Benny Pucci helps the football team finish in second place.

1943 brings new faces. Donald Scott takes over the ROUNDUP. Ray Griffith writes poetry and edits the PIONEER. Oliver Keller skips the January class and Warren Miller steers the June. Red Stewart and Gail Anderson win acclaim in the Band Show. Lester Allen and Katheryn Spanos are our dancers. Emma Jean Kramer, our thrush, takes part in "Katinka". In DULCY, Lester Allen and Nedra Peck are tops. In football, Glenn Schultz and Earl De La Roche vie for honors.

1944 finds James Laclede president of the January class and Alan Tiarks of the June. Marjorie Harrison and Ann Stokes edit an excellent PIONEER, while Richard Overbeck brings out a fine ROUNDUP. Ed Spence not only makes a good Student Council president but does a creditable performance as a ballerina. Bill Conwell is a literary light.

1945 brings Don Spaekler and Bill Rennick to chalk up successful terms as class presidents. QUALITY STREET stars Betty Ann Gertz and Don Nichols. The RHYTHM ROUNDUP brings out Bette Walden. Bob Patterson carries off football honors, and Jeanne Dickman becomes the first MISS SOUTHWEST. Ruth Hammerstein edits an artistic ROUNDUP and Bernard Dell and George McCue receive an All-American honor rating for their PIONEER.

We see Presidents Don Mitchell and Frank Coghill leading the 1946 classes. Herman Ottenad is editor of the fall PIONEER, president of the Student Council, and top radio speaker. Jules Kernen edits the honoring ROUNDUP and wins the coveted Westinghouse Scholarship. Hard-working James Dearing brings more honors for the PIONEER. Kay Symanski and Jack Tandy score in OVER TWENTY-ONE.

We close our book of time regretfully. The footsteps grow fainter and at last they die away. Then with eager fingers we open the new ROUNDUP. The present is here!

*Go forth
To Serve*

Class of June

*Best Wishes
to a sweet
friend always.
Friend Rose*
